1-6				Jewish Family Service Community sponsored support for Jews in need began in New Haven in 1881 when the Hebrew Benevolent Society was organized. Soon after, in 1906, the Hebrew Charity Society came into existence. [see Hyman Jacobs Collection] These societies along with the Mishkan Israel Ladies Relief Association merged on September 10, 1919 to form the United Jewish Charities. In 1928 the United Jewish Charities changed its name to the Jewish Welfare Society because the word ‘charity’ implied pauperism. Eleven years later in 1939 the name was changed to Jewish Family Service [J.F.S.]. The Jewish Family Service was a more appropriate label because the Department of Public Charities of New Haven had in 1934 taken over the relief work which had been done by the Jewish Welfare Society. Families and individuals who sought help from the agency had psychological and personal difficulties to resolve. Trained social workers were needed and they were added to the staff. Isidore Offenbach (see tapes) became the Executive Director of the Jewish Welfare Society on January 27, 1936. Under his supervision a Foster

				Home Care Program for children came into being in 1937 and in 1938 the Jewish Family Service cooperated with the Jewish Community Council to organize the New Haven Committee For Aid to Emigrees. This group helped in the resettlement of refugees from Nazi Europe. In 1942, the Jewish Family Service absorbed the functions of the Committee For Aid to Emigrees. More recently the Jewish Family Service has worked with several new waves of immigrants, Hungarians and Russian Jews, helping them to adjust to American life. Offenbach headed the Jewish Family Service for over thirty years retiring in the late 1960's. Through the years the work of the Jewish Family Service has expended to include social services to the elderly, programs for youth, family enrichment, adoption, volunteers and financial aid to those in emergency situations.
